Approximately two years ago, our organization purchased a gTLD of .church.

We have anticipated that ICAAN and service providers would ensure the new gTLD would become widely recognized as valid domains. Unfortunately, still many email validation systems/software do not recognized .church as valid.

I am perplexed why there is not more stringent compliance for adoption. Usually these gTLD cost more to register, yet a rendered useless by a high number of authentication system.

Are plans in place for ICANN to force compliance?
